Tic Disorders

What are Tics?

Tic disorders cause rapid, uncontrollable movements or sounds that a person makes for no apparent reason. They are involuntary actions and often tend to happen in sudden bouts. Usually occurring on a daily basis, tics are almost always an unwelcome experience for the sufferer.

People with tics may succeed in suppressing them for a short time, but most often not long-term. They are as difficult to suppress as the urge to sneeze! Like the sneeze, it can be very uncomfortable to suppress a tic, and many people describe a feeling of relief afterwards.

Diagnosing Tics

Tics are not always obvious and can be unpredictable in appearance. They may come and go over a period of months, change from one type to another, or disappear for no apparent reason.

Examples of tic disorders include:

- Eye blinking or darting
- Head jerking
- Finger flexing
- Sticking tongue out
- Touching the nose
- Touching other people
- Smelling objects
- Obscene gestures
- Flapping the arms
- Jumping or twirling about
- Throat clearing
- Yelping
- Sniffing
- Tongue clicking
- Uttering words or phrases out of context
- Coprolalia (vocalizing socially unacceptable words)

Types of Motor & Vocal Tics

Examples of Simple Motor Tics:

- Eye blinking or darting
- Head jerking

- In rare cases, self-injurious actions, including hitting or biting oneself

Examples of Simple Vocal Tics:

Examples of Complex Vocal Tics:

What Causes Tics?

The cause of tic disorders is often unknown, although research suggests that tics are more than likely linked to genetics (meaning you may be predisposed to getting a tic) or related to brain chemical abnormalities. Tics are usually not harmful, but they may vary in intensity (simple tics or complex tics) and may be worsened by tension, fatigue, illness, recent head injury, excitement, or even some medications. Many of these tics are exhibited when a person suffers from a tic disorder, known as Tourette's Syndrome.

Help for Tics

One of the problems with treating tics is that there is no known cure for them. As a result, most treatment focuses on the management of tics.

A proper diagnosis is of the utmost importance when it comes to treating tics, as they could be the result of other diseases, such as Tourette's Syndrome.

In some cases, prescription drugs may be prescribed, but these are largely only used when tics are linked to Tourette's Syndrome.

There are a wide range of treatment options available for vocal tics and motor tics, which may involve counseling, learning coping techniques, medication, and natural remedies. The best results are usually obtained by combining a selection of treatment options, depending on the individual needs of the sufferer.

As always, a holistic approach which addresses not only the tics themselves but the individual in his or her social, educational, and family context is always the best approach. There are a number of herbal and homeopathic ingredients which may be of assistance without the negative side effects of prescription drugs. Discuss this option with your doctor, or consult a homeopath or naturopath for advice.

Counseling can assist a person with tics by getting to the root of where the tics stems from, be it anxiety, stress, social anxiety, fear or any other psychological condition. This can be effective in helping patients deal with their tics by raising their awareness of certain “trigger” situations.

Cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT)

Widely accepted as an evidence-based, cost-effective psychotherapy for many disorders, cognitive behavioral therapy has been used with children and adolescents to treat a variety of conditions with good success.

Coping techniques: habit reversal training (HRT)

Intended to increase tic awareness, develop a response strategy to the tic, and motivate the individual to keep a consistent and positive attitude to treatment. Controlled trials have demonstrated that HRT is an acceptable, tolerable, effective, and durable treatment for tics.

Coping techniques: relaxation

Exercise, yoga, or meditation may be useful as drug-free approaches to relieving the stress that may aggravate tics. Frequently, the tics subside with explanation, reassurance, and understanding of the condition in a supportive environment.

Tics can be, and often are, overcome with time. A combination of effective natural remedies and counseling is often the best recipe for success.

Tips for Concerned Parents

There are many ways you as a parent can help your child deal with tics.

Here are a few examples:

- Understand how the tics affect your child and make changes at home and school to best accommodate them.
- Keep a record of your child’s tics, (when they get worse, and the events that surround them). This may help identify triggers. Be careful not to cause your child more stress - approach this in a way that makes your child feel secure.
- Realize tics are not done on purpose. Although tics may frustrate you, do not punish your child for having tics, and try not to show any frustration you may feel. Doing so may increase your child's anxiety and cause more tics.

Tips for Educators Teaching a Child with Tics

Teachers can:

- Provide more time for the pupil to take written tests.
- Provide alternatives if tics affect writing. Allow the child to use a computer, word processor, or typewriter to create assignments rather than handwriting them.
- Provide a quiet place – position a seat where there is privacy and little distraction.
- Allow for frequent rest periods when needed.
- Set a good example for accepting the pupil. It is important for teachers to discourage teasing by responding quickly and firmly whenever it occurs.
- Provide extra tutoring, learning laboratories, or special classes if needed.

The Natural Approach

While Western medicine has become the norm in many cultures, it is not the only treatment option. Conventional western medicine, often called allopathic medicine, is the system of medicine taught at most medical schools and most pharmaceutical and synthetic medicines are manufactured and marketed according to the principles of allopathic medicine. Allopathic medicine is also sometimes called orthodox medicine.

Because most of us in the Western world have grown up in a society in which allopathic medicine is the prevailing norm, we forget that, only a few decades ago, homeopathic, herbal and other natural medicines were commonly available – and freely used even by conventional doctors. While there are often heated debates about which system of medicine is ‘better’ than the other, many responsible doctors (whether they are allopathic or not) recognize that both have a role to play in the treatment program.

Natural medicine has often been frowned on by conventional doctors, especially by those who did not have sufficient knowledge of these medicines. However, it is encouraging to note that some medical schools are now beginning to re-introduce it into their course work, thereby providing doctors with a wider range of treatment options from which to choose. In many countries, especially in Europe, India and China, natural and homeopathic medicines are commonly prescribed by conventional doctors and represent a significant part of the total annual drug sales.

Naturopathy is a branch of medicine (just as allopathy is a branch of medicine) which operates according to the underlying philosophy that the body has an innate capacity to heal itself. While natural medicines are often called ‘alternative’ or ‘complimentary’ medicines, they are, in fact, a unique and independent form of medicine in their own right, well able to treat a variety of conditions. term 'holistic' medicine is more apt, given the broad range of treatment options and approaches which are to be found within the practice of natural medicine, which encompasses many different disciplines, including herbalism, homeopathy, iridology, osteopathy, chiropractic, therapeutic massage techniques, aromatherapy, acupuncture and many, many more.

Most naturopaths will use a variety of treatment modalities in order to treat their patients in a holistic way to support health, relieve symptoms and prevent future disease. In fact, even the World Health Organization defines health as being "... more than simply the absence of illness. It is the active state of physical, emotional, mental and social well-being." This is a wonderfully clear description of holistic or natural medicine, which strives to support health (thereby relieving or preventing symptoms), rather than simply eliminating disease.

Although allopathic medicine certainly has a role to play and has made a tremendous contribution to medical science during the past century, there is a growing perception that it is not the only answer and that, in many cases, holistic medicine can accomplish just as much, if not more – without the risk of side effects, addiction and sacrifice to health so commonly associated with pharmaceutical drugs. Contrary to common perception, and provided that they are manufactured in the correct way, natural medicines can work quickly and safely to promote healing.

In many cases, they can succeed where pharmaceutical drugs have failed. Despite frequent reports that they are 'unproven' and 'untested', the opposite is true. Natural medicines have a long history of usage and there is a wealth of empirical evidence to support their effectiveness and safety. In addition, active clinical research is carried out by many academic hospitals and universities to support the extensive traditional and empirical evidence behind natural medicines.

It is also important to know that, like any medicine, herbal and homeopathic medicines must be manufactured in the correct way, following acceptable procedures and manufacturing methods to ensure maximum effectiveness and safety. Due to the recent rise in popularity of natural remedies, many companies have sprung up to take advantage of the market. Unfortunately not all of them are equipped to manufacture to the correct standards, often resulting in a flood of inferior (and sometimes even unsafe) remedies onto the market – and giving natural remedies a bad name.

Even some pharmaceutical companies have rushed to claim their market share by producing so-called 'standardized' extracts of herbs and offering these as superior to the tried and tested methods of naturopathic manufacturing. Nothing could be further from the truth. While 'standardized' extracts may offer benefit of easy consistency of dosage (and cheaper more efficient production lines), they have grave disadvantages. These include an increase in side effects as the medicines produced in this manner lose the natural protective properties of the herbs. In some cases, these side effects have proved fatal – as was seen in the liver toxicity associated with standardized extracts of kava kava, a herb previously safely used for generations without any known side effects.

Most naturopaths recommend what is called the Full Spectrum Method of extraction – which retains the benefits of ALL the active ingredients within the herb as opposed to isolating only one – thereby providing a more complete treatment as well as superior protection against side effects.
